How to Stay Connected While Planning a Wedding
Simple Ways to Keep Your Relationship at the Heart of Your Celebration

Your engagement is more than a to-do list

Couples don't have to choose between thoughtfully planning their wedding and enjoying their engagement.

Take the time to celebrate privately. Talk about what excites you most about being married and discuss how you'll announce your engagement to your closest friends and family. Enjoy this moment. Planning will start soon enough.

A Little Relationship Advice:

Your engagement is a season worth enjoying, not simply a countdown to your wedding. Make room for moments together that have nothing to do with planning your celebration.

Make Time for Each Other

Prioritize your relationship with each other. Plan regular date nights and talk about things that have nothing to do with wedding planning.

A Little Relationship Advice:

You aren't just planning a wedding. You're planning a marriage. And healthy marriages require intentional connection.

Communicate as a Team

Share your expectations with each other. Don't expect your partner to read your mind, no matter how well they know you. Listen to hear, not to respond. Approach disagreements together, with eye toward resolution, not "winning" the discussion.

A Little Relationship Advice:

You and your partner are on the same team. It's not "you vs your partner." When you win, they win. When they lose, so do you.

Protect Your Peace

Friends and family are going to have opinions about your wedding. Agree ahead of time how you both will handle those, and set healthy boundaries around who will have influence over your wedding, and how much.

A Little Relationship Advice:

Sometimes an opinion offered is sage advice. Other times, it is someone simply voicing their thoughts about how you should do things. Knowing the boundaries before those opinions are offered will save your peace.

Share the Responsibilities

Your contributions don't have to look the same, but you should agree on who's responsible for what. Avoid making assumptions, and check in regularly about your progress and how you're both feeling about the division of responsibilities.

A Little Relationship Advice:

When one partner carries the entire planning burden, resentment can build. Your wedding is about both of you, and planning it should be a shared effort. Remember, you're preparing for one of the most important days of your lives.

A Little Support Goes a Long Way

Wedding planning takes time and energy, but it shouldn't take away from enjoying your engagement. With Aisle & Vow by your side, you can focus more on each other and less on managing details.

Prefer to plan your own wedding? We provide personalized vendor recommendations and wedding coordination beginning eight to ten weeks before your celebration, so you can relax and enjoy your day.

From wedding coaching and timeline creation to full-service planning, coordination, and design, we're here to help you celebrate freely.

Plan Well. Celebrate Freely.
